Cover Letter

Dear Ms Vogel,

mine is an unusual path to your advertisement: I lead a warehouse team on weekdays and assemble furniture on weekends - and the more Saturday jobs I do, the clearer it becomes that this craft, not logistics, is what I want to do full-time.

From sixty assembly jobs in customers' homes I bring a simple standard: arrive prepared, protect floors, check the parts list before starting, and leave only when everything sits straight and I have walked the customer through it. My 4.9 rating comes from being reliable - appointments hold, problems are communicated early - and from treating every home with care. Safety is part of my logistics training: safe lifting is my daily bread, and I keep tool use disciplined and clean.

Leading a team of twelve has taught me teamwork from the other side of the table - planning work, distributing it fairly, and communicating clearly. I will not pretend I bring a carpentry apprenticeship; I bring proven practice, an absurd amount of motivation, and the discipline to learn the theory in evening classes step by step.

I would gladly prove myself in a trial day.

Sincerely, Lena Hartmann
