Dear Selection Committee,

I am writing to apply for the doctoral researcher position in machine learning at your faculty. My Master's thesis applied graph neural networks to city-scale traffic prediction, and the six months inside an EU mobility project taught me how much careful statistics and clear communication matter when research meets city administrators.

I enjoy the collaborative part of research: aligning a consortium, writing deliverables that non-researchers actually read, presenting to a room with engineers and urban planners in it. Interdisciplinary collaboration is what I am looking for in a PhD, and your group's mobility projects are exactly that.

I am learning German with genuine commitment and would value the chance to deepen both my methods knowledge and my language skills in Berlin.

Best regards, Marco Ricci
